VISION

The IPCC stands at a critical point in its history where its assessments build the basis for international policy-making in near real time. To achieve the aims sets in the 2015 Paris agreement signed by world nations, immediate reductions of greenhouse gas emissions need to be achieved, including a halving of CO₂ emissions until 2030, in less than 7 years. In this new phase to be established within the 7th IPCC cycle, it is essential that a stronger alignment between UNFCCC and IPCC is achieved, with a direct IPCC contribution to the Global Stocktake in 2023 and 2028. The integration between the WG I, WG II and WG III assessments, that was built up in the 6th IPCC cycle, needs to be further strengthened to address key remaining policy-relevant questions at their interface: In particular, this includes the consideration of changes in weather and climate extremes, and associated impacts, as constraints for emissions scenarios, and the more in-depth assessment of low-likelihood high-impact scenarios. The new IPCC bureau will have the responsibility to ensure that these challenges can be met in this new phase, to inform how global policy decisions can enable a stabilized climate future.
